attack on Richmond in October. It was sent to New York during the election in November, and joined the first expedition to Fort Fisher in December, returning to Chaffin's bluff on the 31st. The veterans and recruits were reorganized into a battalion of five companies on Dec. 6; and five companies of drafted men were added later, making a full regiment. It participated in the assault on Fort Fisher in Jan., 1865; in the capture of Fort Anderson, and the occupation of Wilmington; and was stationed at Raleigh, until July 20, when it was assigned to duty at Goldsboro, where it remained until mustered out, Sept. 5, 1865. The original strength of the regiment was 1,047. Gain by recruits, 192; reenlistments, 148; unassigned recruits, 40; total, 1,427. Loss by death, 136; desertion, 103; unaccounted for 25. At its reorganization, the original strength was 980. Gain by recruits, 166; total 1,146. Loss by death, 98; desertion, 1; unaccounted for, 30.

→ Fourteenth Infantry — Cols., Nathan Kimball, William Harrow, John Coons; Lieut.-Cols., John R. Mahan, William Harrow, Philander R. Owen, John Coons, Elijah H. C. Cavins, William Houghton. This regiment was organized at Camp Vigo, near Terre Haute, in May, 1861. It originally was a one year regiment, but volunteered for three years on the call for three years troops, being the first Indiana regiment mustered in for that term. It was mustered in June 7, and left the state on July 5. It proceeded to Clarksburg, W. Va., and marched to Rich mountain where it was in reserve at the battle. It was stationed at Cheat mountain from July 16 to Oct. 8, and was engaged at that point on Sept. 12, and at Green Brier river Oct. 3. It encamped at Huttonsville, Philippi and Romney until Jan. 10, 1862, and passed the remainder of the winter at Paw Paw tunnel. On March 4, it joined Shields' division and proceeded to Winchester, where it participated in the battle, losing 4 killed and 50 wounded. On May 15, it commenced its march to Fredericksburg, leaving there on the 24th for Front Royal, which place was reached June 1, in time to assist in driving out the enemy. It was in various movements until July 2, reaching Turkey bend just as the Army of the Potomac was in retreat, the 14th engaging in severe fighting with the pursuing enemy and checking his advance. It was assigned to the 2nd corps and put on outpost duty, being in constant action with the enemy for nearly three weeks, and then moved to Centerville, where it assisted in covering the retreat of the army. It was in reserve at South mountain but at Antietam its division was the only one that never gave way during the battle, its brigade being called the "Gibraltar." The 14th fought for 4 hours within 60 yards of the enemy's line and lost 31 killed and 150 wounded. It moved to Harper's Ferry and Warrenton, thence to Falmouth, where it remained until Dec. 11. Its brigade led the attack on the works at Fredericksburg, but could not advance beyond a certain point, the enemy being too strongly intrenched. The regiment then encamped at Falmouth until April 28, 1863. It was in reserve at Chancellorsville during May 1-2, but on the 3d with its brigade charged and drove the enemy from the ground lost by the 11th corps the previous day, but was forced back by an overwhelming force, losing 7 killed, 50 wounded and 2 missing. It was in the battle of Gettysburg, charging the enemy's advance, saving Ricketts' battery, driving the enemy down the hill and capturing all the field officers, the colors, and most of the men of the 21st N. C. infantry on the evening of the second day's battle. The following day its division bore the brunt of the desperate attack on the left of the cemetery and the regiment lost 123 in killed and wounded. It was sent to New York on Aug. 16, to aid in quelling draft riots, but was with its corps when the enemy was whipped at Bristoe Station in October. It took part in the Mine Run campaign and then went into quarters at Stevensburg, where part of the regiment reenlisted as veterans in Dec., 1863. It when it was in an engagement at Fitzhugh's crossing of the Rappahannock, where it lost 4 men killed and wounded. It was in position at Chancellorsville, but was not called into action. It was then attached to the 1st brigade, 1st division, 1st corps, which was the first of the infantry to engage the enemy at Gettysburg on July 1, 1863. The regiment aided in the capture of Archer's Confederate brigade, but lost 210 men out of 288 that went into battle on that first day. During the other two days of the fight it occupied a position on Cemetery hill, but was not seriously engaged. It then took part in the Mine Run campaign and passed the winter near Culpeper, where a portion of the regiment reenlisted. It broke camp at the beginning of the Wilderness campaign; was engaged at the Wilderness, Laurel hill, about Spottsylvania, at the North Anna river and Cold Harbor; and was then constantly on duty in the trenches before Petersburg until the end of the siege. Its losses from May 4 to July 30, 1864, were 36 killed, 168 wounded and 16 missing. The non-veterans were mustered out at Indianapolis early in Aug., 1864, and the veterans and recruits as part of the "Iron brigade" took part in the expedition against the Weldon railroad. On Oct. 18, 1864, the regiment was consolidated with the 20th Ind., Col. Orr of the 19th becoming colonel of the new organization, and served thus until mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 12, 1865.

Twentieth Infantry.—Cols., William L. Brown, John Van Valkenburg, John Wheeler, William C. L. Taylor, William Orr, Albert S. Andrews; Lieut.-Cols., Charles D. Murray, Benjamin H. Smith, John Van Valkenburg, John Wheeler, James H. Shannon, William C. L. Taylor, George W. Meikel, Albert S. Andrews, John W. Shafer; Majs., Benjamin H. Smith, John Van Valkenburg, John Wheeler, George F. Dick, James H. Shannon, William C. L. Taylor, George W. Meikel, Erasmus C. Galbreath, William Orr, Joseph T. Ives, John W. Shafer, John W. Williams. This regiment was organized at Lafayette in July 1861, and was mustered in at Indianapolis, July 22. It left the state on Aug. 2, being ordered to Cockeysville, Md., for railroad guard duty. It sailed for Hatteras inlet, N. C., Sept. 24, and was sent to north end of Hatteras bank, 40 miles from the fortifications, without transportation or artillery. It was attacked on Oct. 4, by the enemy's fleet, loaded with infantry, and was compelled to retreat. It embarked Nov. 9, for Fortress Monroe, where it remained until March, 1862. It was at Newport News during the engagement between the Merrimac, Cumberland and Congress, and prevented the enemy from taking possession of the Congress after she had struck her colors. It participated in the capture of Norfolk, and on June 8, was assigned to Jameson's brigade, Kearny's division, Heintzelman's corps, with which it fought at Fair Oaks. It was in the battle of Oak Grove, where it lost 144 in killed, wounded and missing, and covered the rear of the 3d corps in the Seven Days' battles, participating in all of them and being heavily engaged at Frazier's farm. It then moved to Yorktown, Alexandria, and thence to Manassas, where it was engaged, Col. Brown being killed. It was also in the battle of Chantilly, after which its division was ordered to rest, having lost heavily in its campaigns, and the 20th went into camp at Arlington heights. On Oct. 11, it crossed the Potomac, hoping to intercept Stuart's cavalry, and was in camp at Poolesville, Md., until Oct. 29, when it moved to Leesburg and Warrenton. With Franklin's corps it was engaged at Fredericksburg, and in May 1863, was in the battle of Chancellorsville, capturing the entire 23d Georgia, which outnumbered it, and when the 11th corps broke and the enemy turned the right of the Union forces, cutting off the 3d corps from the main army, the regiment made a bayonet charge, reestablishing communication. It pursued Lee through Maryland and Pennsylvania, reaching Gettysburg in time to

participate in the second day's battle, where it was exposed to a sweeping fire, and lost 152 in killed and wounded, including Col. Wheeler. It was in hot engagements on the 3d, and in heavy skirmishing on the 4th. Overtaking Lee's rear-guard at Manassas gap, it aided in an attack and defeat of the enemy, and was then sent to New York during the draft riots. It was engaged at Locust Grove and Mine run in November. A portion of the regiment reenlisted as veterans on Jan. 1, 1864, at Culpeper and received a furlough. The 20th participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Todd's tavern, Po river, Spottsylvania, Totopotomy and Cold Harbor. At the last point the veterans and recruits of the 14th were consolidated with the 20th. It was engaged at Deep Bottom and Strawberry Plains, and was then in the trenches before Petersburg, under fire daily, Lieut.-Col. Meikel being killed. On Oct. 18, the recruits and veterans of the 17th and 19th were consolidated with the 20th. The regiment was engaged in the various movements about Petersburg, participating at Peebles' farm, and Hatcher's run. It was in the advance division of the 2nd corps in the pursuit of Lee and participated in the various battles up to his surrender. It then moved to Washington, thence to Louisville, and was mustered out July 12, 1865. The original strength of the regiment was 1,051; gain by recruits, 410; reenlistments, 282; total, 1,743. Loss by death, 228; desertion, 66; unaccounted for, 176. On reorganization the strength was originally, 906; gain by recruits, 33; total, 939; loss by death, 44; unaccounted for, 56.

Twenty-first Infantry (1st Heavy Artillery).—Cols., James W. McMillan, John A. Keith, Benjamin F. Hayes; Lieut.-Cols., John A. Keith, Benjamin F. Hayes, William Roy, James W. Connelly; Majs., Benjamin F. Hayes, William Roy, James Grimsley, Edward McLaffin, John W. Day, James W. Connelly, Isaac C. Hendricks, Samuel E. Armstrong. This regiment was organized at Indianapolis and was mustered in July 24, 1861. It left the state a week later for Baltimore where it remained until Feb. 19, 1863, participating in Gen. Lockwood's expedition to the eastern shore of Virginia. It then moved for Newport News, from which place it sailed with Butler's expedition, and was on the "Great Republic," off the mouth of the Southwest Pass during the bombardments of Forts St. Philip and Jackson. A portion of the regiment landed in the rear of St. Philip and waded across to the quarantine, the balance going up the Mississippi to New Orleans, being the first of the army to land. It went into camp at Algiers, and captured several steamers on Red river. The regiment was landed at Baton Rouge, June 1, and in the battle at that place Aug. 5, it fought an entire brigade for three and one-half hours, losing 126 men. At Des Allemands in September it killed 12 of Walters' Texas Rangers and captured 30 prisoners. It was at Berwick bay from Oct., 1862, to Feb. 1863. Part of the regiment was transferred to gunboats, being in engagements almost daily with the iron-clad Cotton; accompanied Weitzel's advance up Bayou Teche, and was in the fight at Cornet's bridge and the destruction of the Cotton. Col. McMillan was appointed brigadier-general on Nov. 29, and Lieut.-Col. Keith was commissioned colonel. In Feb., 1863, the regiment was transferred to heavy artillery service and designated 1st heavy artillery, two additional companies being organized and attached later in the year. Part of the regiment accompanied Gen. Banks up the Teche, participating in the second battle at Fort Bisland. Later all but two companies moved to Port Hudson, and participated in the siege for 42 days. One company was in a desperate fight at La Fourche crossing in June and Co. F. was captured at Brashear City. In August three companies accompanied the Sabine Pass expedition and were in the engagement at that point. The greater number of the regiment reenlisted during the winter of 1863-4, and were given

THOMAS, GEORGE H.

At the close of the war, General George H. Thomas, Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Regiment, dispatched orders for maintaining peaceful relations, arrest pillagers, strangers, allow amnesty oath of General Woodford, etc., George H. Thomas to Brigadier General H. M. Juday, May 14, 1865; also letter to Brigadier General Edward Hatch, May 15, 1865. From the Civil War files of George H. Thomas. INHI

FOURTEENTH INDIANA REGIMENT

"The Fourteenth Regiment was originally organized at Camp Vigo, near Terre Haute, in May, 1861, as one of the six regiments of State troops accepted for one year. Upon the call for three years' troops, the regiment volunteered, almost unanimously, for that service. The new organization was mustered into United States' service at Terre Haute, on the 7th of June, 1861, being the first three years' regiment mustered in from Indiana. With 1134 men and officers, and NATHAN KIMBALL as its Colonel, the Fourteenth arrived at Indianapolis on the 24th of June, where it remained until the 5th of July, when it left for the seat of war in Western Virginia, fully armed and equipped. On the 11th, after a forced march from Clarksburgh, the regiment reached Rich Mountain, where it was held in reserve in line of battle, but did not participate in the engagement. After the victory, the column moved on, through Beverly, to Cheat Mountain, where the Fourteenth was stationed on outpost duty, from the 16th of July to the 8th of October, during which time it bore a conspicuous part in the engagement with Lee's army, on Cheat Mountain, on the 12th of September, losing three killed, eleven wounded, and two prisoners; and, also, in the battle of Green Brier, on the 3d of October, losing five killed and eleven wounded. On the 15th of December it moved from Huttonsville to Philippi, and marching from there on the 30th, via Green Spring Run, went into quarters at Romney. Remaining at that place until the 10th of January, 1862, it then moved to Paw Paw Tunnel, where the remainder of the winter was spent, the regiment, during the time, engaging in several expeditions in search of the enemy. On the 4th of March, it marched to Martinsburg, where Gen. Shields assumed the command of the division, and ordered it immediately to Winchester. On the evening of the 22d of March, the regiment was engaged in some severe skirmishing with Stonewall Jackson's army in its advance on Winchester from Strasburg, and on the day following, participated in the decisive battle of Winchester Heights, losing four killed and fifty wounded. Gen. Shields having received a wound on the 22d, the command of the army devolved on Col. Kimball, which left the Fourteenth in command of Lieut. Col. Harrow. The regiment took part in the pursuit of the enemy that followed this battle, and on the 15th of May, commenced its march to Fredericksburgh, reporting to Gen. McDowell at that place on the 22d, and on the 24th marched back again, by way of Manassas Gap, to Front Royal, arriving there on the 1st of June, in time to aid in driving the enemy out of the place. It was then marched and counter-marched, between Front Royal and Luray, until the 19th of June, when it was marched to Bristow Station, on the Orange and Alexandria railroad, and from thence by rail to Alexandria. The whole distance marched from May 12th till June 23d, was 339 miles, a part of which time, most of the men were without shoes, and very short of rations. Moving to Alexandria, by rail, and thence by water, the regiment reached Turkey Bend, on the James river, on the 2d of July. The army of the Potomac was then retreating, and the enemy following closely. The Fourteenth was at once sent out to meet the enemy, and assisted in checking his advance, after some severe fighting. Being assigned to the 2d Army Corps, then commanded by Sumner, it was kept on the extreme outpost, without tents or covering of any kind, for some twenty days, coming in contact with the enemy almost night and day. On the 15th of August it marched with the army from Harrison's Landing to Newport News, where transports were taken to Alexandria, from which place it was hurriedly marched to Centreville on the 30th, where it assisted in covering the retreat of the army of the Potomac. Then followed the Maryland campaign, during which the regiment marched to Frederick City, and thence to South Mountain, where it was held in reserve during the battle on the 12th of September. Following the rebels over the mountain, it participated in the great battle of Antietam on the 17th, serving in Kimball's brigade of French's division, it being the only portion of the line of battle that did not, at some time during the engagement, give way.

For its behavior on this occasion Gen. French gave the Brigade the title of the "Gibraltar Brigade"—it having maintained its position, repelling the terrible onslaught of the enemy, filling the ditch in front with killed and wounded, and, finally advancing and driving the enemy from the field, taking many prisoners. The Fourteenth was engaged for four hours within sixty yards of the enemy's line, and after exhausting sixty rounds of cartridges the men supplied themselves with others from the boxes of their dead and wounded companions. It went into the fight with 320 men and lost 31 killed and 150 wounded, including three officers killed and seven wounded. After the battle the Brigade marched to Harper's Ferry, arriving there on the 22d, from whence, on the 29th of October, it moved to Warrenton. Here Burnside assumed the command of the army. The Fourteenth then marched to Falmouth and remained inactive until the 11th of December, when the movement on Fredericksburgh commenced. After crossing the Rappahannock on the 12th and occupying Fredericksburgh, the battle was commenced on the morning of the 13th, by the "Gibraltar Brigade" leading the attack upon the enemy's works, just outside the city. Such was the strength of the enemy's works, and so great was his advantage of position, that it was found impossible to advance beyond a certain point, where some little protection was given by a depression in the ground. Here the brigade lay until sundown, when the army was withdrawn, with a loss to the Fourteenth regiment of four killed, seventeen wounded, and eight missing. On the 15th, the regiment recrossed the river, and remained at Falmouth until the 28th of April, 1863, when it marched to the United States Ford, and crossed over to Chancellorsville. On the first two days of the battle—1st and 2d of May—the "Gibraltar Brigade" was held in reserve, but on the third it was moved to the front (the Fourteenth Indiana being on the right), and charging the enemy, drove him some distance, re-occupying the ground lost the day before by the retreat of the 11th Corps. The overwhelming force, however, was supported and relieved for three hours. The loss was two missing. After the regiment went into the 6th of May till the 14th of May at Edwards' Ferry, reached Gettysburg on the 15th, where it was placed in position, when it was moved to the front of Gen. Howard's Corps. The Fourteenth saved the rebels down the hill colors, and most of the rebels in its immediate flank fire, made on the 14th. In the bloody contest of the hill, the Fourteenth (of the 2d Corps), of the desperate attack, lost one hundred wounded. After the victory at Williamsburg, on the 15th, it was sent to New York to aid in the defense of the city, and rejoined the Army of the Potomac in the 2d Corps. On the 17th of May, at the battle of Coldwater, the 2d Corps, defeated the enemy at Mine Run. Rappahannock, the Regiment was re-enlisted in February, 1864, it moved to the front of the action was had with the enemy. After this the 1st of May, when the whole of the engagements took an active part, Hancock's brigade, while bravely leading the works. The battle of Coldwater was engaged, the non-veterans were sent to Indianapolis for mustering of service. Reaching Indianapolis on the 20th, to the 1st of August, transferred until its final march of July, 1865."

It was then marched and counted until the 19th of June, when it reached Alexandria railroad, and a distance marched from May each time, most of the men were going to Alexandria, by rail, and Bend, on the James river, on when retreating, and the enemy sent out to meet the enemy, some severe fighting. Being ordered by Sumner, it was kept on of any kind, for some twenty night and day. On the 15th of n's Landing to Newport News, in which place it was hurriedly assisted in covering the retreat of the Maryland campaign, during and thence to South Mountain, he on the 12th of September. participated in the great battle of brigade of French's division, a that did not, at some time which gave the Brigade the title of the 14th, repelling the attack in front with killed and enemy from the field, taking four hours within sixty yards rounds of cartridges the men of their dead and wounded men and lost 31 killed and 150 seven wounded. After the battle, arriving there on the 11th, moved to Warrenton. Here the Fourteenth then marched on the 11th of December, when the battle was commenced on the 11th leading the attack upon the strength of the enemy's position, that it was found impossible to get some little protection was the brigade lay until sundown, the Fourteenth regiment of the 14th. On the 15th, the regiment moved until the 28th of April, 1863, and crossed over to Chancellorsville on the 2d of May—the "Gibraltar" and it was moved to the front and charging the enemy, drove the day before by the retreat of the 11th Corps. The rebels, however, soon rallied, and, massing an overwhelming force, compelled the brigade to fall back to a point where it was supported and relieved by Col. Caldwell's brigade, after being engaged for three hours. The loss to the Fourteenth was seven killed, fifty wounded, and two missing. After the battle, and the retreat across the Rappahannock, the regiment went into its old camp at Falmouth, remaining there from the 6th of May till the 14th of June, when it marched northward, crossing the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry. Going by way of Frederick City, the Fourteenth reached Gettysburg on the evening of the 1st of July, and the next morning was placed in position, but did not participate in the fighting until about dusk, when it was moved to the front of the cemetery, on the right, to the relief of Gen. Howard's Corps. Here, in a charge made upon the advancing rebels, the Fourteenth saved from capture the guns of Rickett's battery, crowded the rebels down the hill in front, and captured all of the Field officers, the colors, and most of the men, of the 21st North Carolina. After silencing the rebels in its immediate front, the regiment also succeeded in resisting a flank fire, made on the left of its rear, during the night.

In the bloody contest that took place the following afternoon for the possession of the hill, the Fourteenth bore a conspicuous part, the Division (Gen. Harrow's), of the 2d Corps, to which it was attached, bearing the brunt of the desperate attack immediately on the left of the Cemetery. The Regiment lost one hundred and twenty-three men and officers in killed and wounded. After the victory, the Fourteenth followed the retreating rebels to Williamsburg, on the Potomac, and from thence marched, by the way of Harper's Ferry, to Elk Run, near Warrenton. On the 16th of August, it was sent to New York to aid in quelling the riots there. In October, the Regiment rejoined the Army of the Potomac, at Wilson's Creek, Va., and took its old place in the 2d Corps. On the 10th of that month, during Gen. Meade's retreat from Culpepper, the 2d Corps halted at Bristow Station, and, giving the enemy battle, defeated him handsomely. Advancing again, and crossing the Rappahannock, the Regiment participated in the attack on the enemy's entrenchments at Mine Run, on the 27th of November. Returning to Stevensburgh, the Regiment went into winter quarters, and while here a portion of the Regiment re-enlisted, on the 24th of December, 1863. On the 6th of February, 1864, it moved to Morton's Ford, on the Rapidan, where a severe action was had with the enemy, the Fourteenth losing two killed and thirteen wounded. After this the Regiment remained in its old quarters until the 4th of May, when the whole army moved southward, with Gen. Grant in command. In all of the engagements that followed this forward movement, the Fourteenth took an active part, Hancock's 2d Corps being, on all occasions, selected to bear the brunt of the severest fighting. At Spottsylvania, Col. Coons was killed, while bravely leading the Fourteenth to a victorious charge upon the enemy's works. The battle of Cold Harbor was the last one in which the old Fourteenth was engaged, the non-veterans being, on the 6th of June, ordered to report to Indianapolis for muster out, on account of the expiration of their term of service. Reaching Indianapolis on the 12th of June, they were finally discharged on the 20th, to date back to the 16th of June, 1865. The detachment of veterans and recruits remained on duty with the 2d Corps, and was, on the 1st of August, transferred to the 20th Regiment, with which organization it served until its final muster out of service, at Louisville, Ky., on the 12th of July, 1865."

TWENTIETH INDIANA REGIMENT

"The Twentieth Regiment was organized at Lafayette, in the month of July, 1861, after which it rendezvoused at Indianapolis, where it was mustered into service for three years, on the 22d of July, 1861. Leaving the Capital on the 2d of August, it reached Cockeysville, near Baltimore, Maryland, and was placed on duty guarding the Northern Central Railroad to the Pennsylvania line. On the 24th of September the regiment took steamer for Baltimore, and sailed for Hatteras Inlet, North Carolina, which place was reached on the 27th of September. Soon after landing it was sent to the north end of Hatteras Bank, forty miles from the fortifications, without transportation or artillery, and on the 4th of October was attacked by the enemy's fleet, gunboats and transports loaded with infantry, and forced to retreat to the lighthouse, twenty-eight miles distant, and on the next day returned to the fortifications. Remaining here until the 9th of November, the regiment that day embarked for Fortress Monroe, arriving there the following day. Here it lay in camp until March, 1862, when it moved its quarters to Newport News, where it participated in the engagement between the Merrimac, Cumberland and Congress, on the 8th of March, the regiment while deployed on shore, prevented the captors from taking possession of the ship Congress, which had struck her colors to the enemy, wounding the rebel commander Buchanan, and killing and wounding several more. On the 10th of May it moved to Norfolk, and participated in the capture of that city, after which it joined the Army of the Potomac on the Peninsula. Reporting for duty on the 8th of June, it was assigned to Jamieson's Brigade, Kearney's Division, Heintzleman's Corps, and took position on the Fair Oaks battle-ground. On the 25th of June the regiment was severely engaged with the enemy at the battle of the "Orchards," sustaining a loss of 144 men and officers in killed, wounded and missing. It covered the retreat of the 3d Corps in the celebrated Seven Days' Fight, participating in all of the battles, especially that of "Glendale," or "Frazier's Farm," in which the regiment lost heavily.

The Twentieth formed a portion of the flank guard of the Army of the Potomac during its march across the Peninsula to Yorktown. Taking steamer there it proceeded to Alexandria, and from thence moved to the Rappahannock, and again to Manassas Plains, where, on the 29th of August, it took part in the battle, the brave Col. Brown falling early in the action. On the 1st of September it was engaged in the battle of Chantilly, after which it proceeded to Alexandria, and from thence to Arlington Heights. The Division to which it belonged being so completely decimated by loss of officers and men it was ordered to rest, and for this reason did not participate in the Maryland campaign that followed. On the 11th of October the Twentieth crossed the Potomac at Georgetown, and moved forward to intercept Stuart's cavalry raiders near Conrad's Ford, but reached there ten hours after they had crossed. It then went into camp near Poolsville, where it remained until the 29th of October, when it re-crossed the Potomac at Conrad's Ford and marched to Leesburg, and from thence to Warrenton. Proceeding to Falmouth in November, it crossed the Rappahannock below Fredericksburg on the 11th of December, and took part in the battle on the left of that city with Franklin's Corps. In this engagement the regiment aided in saving from capture three Union batteries. During its stay over the river its loss was but small.

On the 30th of April, 1863, the Twentieth crossed the Rappahannock with the 3d Corps and took a position, and was actively engaged from the first in the battle of Chancellorsville, capturing at one time the whole of the Twenty-Third Georgia, numbering more than its own men. When the 11th Corps broke, enabling the enemy to turn our right and cut off the 3d Corps from the main army, rendering a midnight attack necessary, the regiment was withdrawn from the front, and facing to the rear, made a charge with the bayonet, driving the enemy back and establishing communication. After resting for nearly a month the Twentieth moved with the Army of the Potomac in the pursuit of Lee through Maryland and into Pennsylvania, reaching Gettysburg in time to participate in the second day's battle, on the 2d of July. Attached to the 2d brigade of the 1st Division of Sickles's Corps, it occupied a position on the extreme left of the army, where for some time it was exposed to a galling fire from the enemy, who were concealed behind a stone wall. Here it lost its commanding officer, Col. John Wheeler, and 152 men and officers killed and wounded. On the 3d the regiment was again engaged, and contributed largely to prevent the rebel forces from breaking through our lines, and in securing the great victory that followed. On the 4th of July it was again thrown forward as skirmishers, and had a severe fight, losing one officer and several men. After this it joined in the pursuit, crossing the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, and, overtaking the rear guard of Lee's army at Manassas Gap, attacked and defeated the enemy. Subsequently the regiment was sent to New York, for the purpose of suppressing threatened riots in that city on account of the draft. It rejoined the Army of the Potomac in time to join in the engagements at Locust Grove and Mine Run, in November. It then went into winter quarters, and on the 1st of January, 1864, a portion of the regiment re-enlisted in Indiana on veteran furlough.

The Twentieth crossed the Potomac and participated in the battle of Spottsylvania, Tollypotanna and recruits of the Fourteenth. The regiment then crossed the Potomac of Deep Bottom and Strathairn trenches in front of Petersburg. Many officers and men. The regiment was engaged in the battle of October, 1864, the recruits of the Fourteenth were transferred to the Twentieth. Colonel of the new Twentieth in the works near Petersburg following spring. The regiment was sent out, with other troops on the Weldon Railroad, it participated in the battles of Hatcher's Run. In all of the fall of Richmond, the advance division of the 2d in the pursuit of Lee, participated in the Army of Virginia—its last on the 9th of April, 1865. City, from whence it moved where it arrived on the 21st was mustered out at that duty. Returning to Indiana S. Andrews, (originally of by Gov. The Twentieth cross the Rapidan, with Grant's army, in May, 1864, and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Todd's Tavern, Po River, Spottsylvania, Tollopotanni and Cold Harbor. At the latter place the veterans and recruits of the Fourteenth Regiment were consolidated with the Twentieth.
The regiment then crossed the James river, and was engaged in the battles of Deep Bottom and Strawberry Plains, after which it was placed in the trenches in front of Petersburg, where it was under fire every day, losing many officers and men. Lieut. Col. George W. Meikel was killed while the regiment was engaged in this arduous and perilous duty. On the 18th of October, 1864, the recruits and veterans of the Seventh and Nineteenth Regiments were transferred to and consolidated with the Twentieth—the Colonel of the new Twentieth being William Orr, formerly Lieutenant Colonel of the Nineteenth. After the consolidation, the regiment remained in the works near Petersburg until the advance made by the army the following spring. The only respite from this duty was when the regiment was sent out, with other troops, to cut enemy's communications. In advance on the Weldon Railroad, it went as far as Stony Creek, and afterwards participated in the battles on the left of Petersburg, at Preble's House and Hatcher's Run. In all of the engagements on the left, from Hatcher's Run to the fall of Richmond, the Twentieth took an active part, and was in the advance division of the 2d corps, which was the directing corps of the army in the pursuit of Lee, participating in all the battles up to the surrender of the Army of Virginia—its last engagement with the enemy being at Clover Hill, on the 9th of April, 1865. Soon after, the regiment marched to Washington City, from whence it moved to Louisville, Kentucky, on the 14th of June, where it arrived on the 21st of the same month. On the 12th of July, 1865, it was mustered out at that place, with 390 men and 23 officers present for FOURTEENTH REGIMENT—THREE YEARS' SERVICE.

The Fourteenth Regiment was originally organized at Camp Vigo, near Terre Haute, in May, 1861, as one of the six regiments of State troops accepted for one year. Upon the call for three years' troops, the regiment volunteered, almost unanimously, for that service. The new organization was mustered into United States' service at Terre Haute, on the 7th of June, 1861, being the first three years' regiment mustered in from Indiana. With 1134 men and officers, and NATHAN KIMBALL as its Colonel, the Fourteenth arrived at Indianapolis on the 24th of June, where it remained until the 5th of July, when it left for the seat of war in Western Virginia, fully armed and equipped. On the 11th, after a forced march from Clarksburgh, the regiment reached Rich Mountain, where it was held in reserve in line of battle, but did not participate in the engagement. After the victory, the column moved on, through Beverly, to Cheat Mountain, where the Fourteenth was stationed on outpost duty, from the 16th of July to the 8th of October, during which time it bore a conspicuous part in the engagement with Lee's army, on Cheat Mountain, on the 12th of September, losing three killed, eleven wounded, and two prisoners; and, also, in the battle of Green Brier, on the 3d of October, losing five killed and eleven wounded. On the 15th of December it moved from Huttonsville to Philippi, and marching from there on the 30th, via Green Spring Run, went into quarters at Romney. Remaining at that place until the 10th of January, 1862, it then moved to Paw Paw Tunnel, where the remainder of the winter was spent, the regiment, during the time, engaging in several expeditions in search of the enemy. On the 4th of March, it marched to Martinsburg, where Gen. Shields assumed the command of the division, and ordered it immediately to Winchester. On the evening of the 22d of March, the

to Centerville on the 30th, where it assisted in covering the retreat of the army of the Potomac. Then followed the Maryland campaign, during which the regiment marched to Frederick City, and thence to South Mountain, where it was held in reserve during the battle on the 12th of September. Following the rebels over the mountain, it participated in the great battle of Antietam on the 17th, serving in Kimball's brigade of French's division, it being the only portion of the line of battle that did not, at some time during the engagement, give way.

For its behavior on this occasion Gen. French gave the Brigade the title of the "Gibraltar Brigade"—it having maintained its position, repelling the terrible onslaught of the enemy, filling the ditch in front with killed and wounded, and, finally advancing and driving the enemy from the field, taking many prisoners. The Fourteenth was engaged for four hours within sixty yards of the enemy's line, and after exhausting sixty rounds of cartridges the men supplied themselves with others from the boxes of their dead and wounded companions. It went into the fight with 320 men and lost 31 killed and 150 wounded, including three officers killed and seven wounded. After the battle the Brigade marched to Harper's Ferry, arriving there on the 22d, from whence, on the 29th of October, it moved to Warrenton. Here Burnside assumed the command of the army. The Fourteenth then marched to Falmouth and remained inactive until the 11th of December, when the movement on Fredericksburgh commenced. After crossing the Rappahannock on the 12th and occupying Fredericksburgh, the battle was commenced on the morning of the 13th, by the "Gibraltar Brigade" leading the attack upon the enemy's works, just outside the city. Such was the strength of the enemy's works, and so great was his advantage of position, that it was found impossible to advance beyond a certain point, where some little regiment was engaged in some severe skirmishing with Stonewall Jackson's army in its advance on Winchester from Strasburg, and on the day following, participated in the decisive battle of Winchester Heights, losing four killed and fifty wounded. Gen. Shields having received a wound on the 22d, the command of the army devolved on Col. Kimball, which left the Fourteenth in command of Lieut. Col. Harrow. The regiment took part in the pursuit of the enemy that followed this battle, and on the 15th of May, commenced its march to Fredericksburgh, reporting to Gen. McDowell at that place on the 22d, and on the 24th marched back again, by way of Manassas Gap, to Front Royal, arriving there on the 1st of June, in time to aid in driving the enemy out of the place. It was then marched and counter-marched, between Front Royal and Luray, until the 19th of June, when it was marched to Bristow Station, on the Orange and Alexandria railroad, and from thence by rail to Alexandria. The whole distance marched from May 12th till June 23d, was 339 miles, a part of which time, most of the men were without shoes, and very short of rations. Moving to Alexandria, by rail, and thence by water, the regiment reached Turkey Bend, on the James river, on the 2d of July. The army of the Potomac was then retreating, and the enemy following closely. The Fourteenth was at once sent out to meet the enemy, and assisted in checking his advance, after some severe fighting. Being assigned to the 2d Army Corps, then commanded by Sumner, it was kept on the extreme outpost, without tents or covering of any kind, for some twenty days, coming in contact with the enemy almost night and day. On the 15th of August it marched with the army from Harrison's Landing to Newport News, where transports were taken to Alexandria, from which place it was hurriedly marched protection was given by a depression in the ground. Here the brigade lay until sundown, when the army was withdrawn, with a loss to the Fourteenth regiment of four killed, seventeen wounded, and eight missing. On the 15th, the regiment recrossed the river, and remained at Falmouth until the 28th of April, 1863, when it marched to the United States Ford, and crossed over to Chancellorsville. On the first two days of the battle—1st and 2d of May—the "Gibraltar Brigade" was held in reserve, but on the third it was moved to the front (the Fourteenth Indiana being on the right), and charging the enemy, drove him some distance, re-occupying the ground lost the day before by the retreat of the 11th Corps. The rebels, however, soon rallied, and, massing an overwhelming force, compelled the brigade to fall back to a point where it was supported and relieved by Col. Caldwell's brigade, after being engaged for three hours. The loss to the Fourteenth was seven killed, fifty wounded, and two missing. After the battle, and the retreat across the Rappahannock, the regiment went into its old camp at Falmouth, remaining there from the 6th of May till the 14th of June, when it marched northward, crossing the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry. Going by way of Frederick City, the Fourteenth reached Gettysburg on the evening of the 1st of July, and the next morning was placed in position, but did not participate in the fighting until about dusk, when it was moved to the front of the cemetery, on the right, to the relief of Gen. Howard's Corps. Here, in a charge made upon the advancing rebels, the Fourteenth saved from capture the guns of Rickett's battery, crowded the rebels down the hill in front, and captured all of the Field officers, the colors, and most of the men, of the 21st North Carolina. After silencing the rebels in its immediate front, the regiment also succeeded in resisting a flank fire, made on the left of its rear, during the night.

In the bloody contest that took place the following afternoon for the possession of the hill, the Fourteenth bore a conspicuous part, the Division (Gen. Harrow's), of the 2d Corps, to which it was attached, bearing the brunt of the desperate attack immediately on the left of the Cemetery. The Regiment lost one hundred and twenty-three men and officers in killed and wounded. After the victory, the Fourteenth followed the retreating rebels to Williamsburg, on the Potomac, and from thence marched, by the way of Harper's Ferry, to Elk Run, near Warrenton. On the 16th of August, it was sent to New York to aid in quelling the riots there. In October, the Regiment rejoined the Army of the Potomac, at Wilson's Creek, Va., and took its old place in the 2d Corps. On the 10th of that month, during Gen. Meade's retreat from Culpepper, the 2d Corps halted at Bristow Station, and, giving the enemy battle, defeated him handsomely. Advancing again, and crossing the Rappahannock, the Regiment participated in the attack on the enemy's entrenchments at Mine Run, on the 27th of November. Returning to Stevensburgh, the Regiment went into winter quarters, and while here a portion of the Regiment re-enlisted, on the 24th of December, 1863. On the 6th of February, 1864, it moved to Morton's Ford, on the Rapidan, where a severe action was had with the enemy, the Fourteenth losing two killed and thirteen wounded. After this the Regiment remained in its old quarters until the 4th of May, when the whole army moved southward, with Gen. Grant in command. In all of the engagements that followed this forward movement, the Fourteenth took an active part, Hancock's 2d Corps being, on all occasions, selected to bear the brunt of the severest fighting. At Spottsylvania, Col. Coons was killed, while bravely leading the Fourteenth to a victorious charge upon the enemy's works. The battle of Cold Harbor was the last one in which the old Fourteenth was engaged, the non-veterans being, on the 6th of June, ordered to report to Indianapolis for muster out, on account of the expiration of their term of service. Reaching Indianapolis on the 12th of June, they were finally discharged on the 20th, to date back to the 16th of June, 1865. The detachment of veterans and recruits remained on duty with the 2d Corps, and was, on the 1st of August, transferred to the 20th Regiment, with which organization it served until its final muster out of service, at Louisville, Ky, on the 12th of July, 1865.

TWENTIETH REGIMENT INFANTRY

of the Potomac during its march across the Peninsula to Yorktown. Taking steamer there it proceeded to Alexandria, and from thence moved to the Rappahannock, and again to Manassas Plains, where, on the 29th of August, it took part in the battle, the brave Col. Brown falling early in the action. On the 1st of September it was engaged in the battle of Chantilly, after which it proceeded to Alexandria, and from thence to Arlington Heights. The division to which it belonged being so completely decimated by loss of officers and men it was ordered to rest, and for this reason did not participate in the Maryland campaign that followed. On the 11th of October the Twentieth crossed the Potomac at Georgetown, and moved forward to intercept Stuart's cavalry raiders near Conrad's Ford, but reached there ten hours after they had crossed. It then went into camp near Poolesville, where it remained until the 29th of October, when it re-crossed the Potomac at Conrad's Ford and marched to Leesburg, and from thence to Warrenton. Proceeding to Falmouth in November, it crossed the Rappahannock below Fredericksburg on the 11th of December, and took part in the battle on the left of that city with Franklin's Corps. In this engagement the regiment aided in saving from capture three Union batteries. During its stay over the river its loss was but small.

On the 30th of April, 1863, the Twentieth crossed the Rappahannock with the 3d Corps and took a position, and was actively engaged from the first in the battle of Chancellorsville, capturing at one time the whole of the Twenty-Third Georgia, numbering more than its own men. When the 11th Corps broke, enabling the enemy to turn our right and cut off the 3d Corps from the main army, rendering a midnight attack necessary, the regiment was withdrawn from the front, and facing to the rear, made a charge with the bayonet, driving the enemy back and establishing communication. After resting for nearly a month, the Twentieth moved with the Army of the Potomac in the pursuit of Lee through Maryland and into Pennsylvania, reaching Gettysburg in time to participate in the second day's battle, on the 2d of July. Attached to the 2d Brigade of the 1st Division of Sickles's Corps, it occupied a position on the extreme left of the army, where for some time it was exposed to a galling fire from the enemy, who were concealed behind a stone wall. Here it lost its commanding officer, Col. John Wheeler, and 152 men and officers killed and wounded. On the 3d the regiment was again engaged, and contributed largely to prevent the rebel forces from breaking through our lines, and in securing the great victory that followed. On the 4th of July it was again thrown forward as skirmishers, and had a severe fight, losing one officer and several men. After this it joined in the pursuit, crossing the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, and, overtaking the rear guard of Lee's army at Manassas Gap, attacked and defeated the enemy. Subsequently the regiment was sent to New York, for the purpose of suppressing threatened riots in that city on account of the draft. It rejoined the Army of the Potomac in time to join in the engagements at Locust Grove and Mine Run, in November. It then went into winter quarters, and on the 1st of January, 1864, a portion of the regiment re-enlisted at Culpepper, Virginia, and soon after visited Indiana on veteran furlough.

The Twentieth crossed the Rapidan, with Grant's army, in May, 1864, and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Todd's Tavern, Po River, Spottsylvania, Tollopotanni and Cold Harbor. At the latter place the veterans and recruits of the Fourteenth Regiment were consolidated with the Twentieth. The regiment then crossed the James river, and was engaged in the battles of Deep Bottom and Strawberry Plains, after which it was placed in the trenches in front of Petersburg, where it was under fire every day, losing many officers and men. Lieut. Col. George W. Meikel was killed while the regiment was engaged in this arduous and perilous duty. On the 18th of October, 1864, the recruits and veterans of the Seventh and Nineteenth Regiments were transferred to and consolidated with the Twentieth—the Colonel of the new Twentieth being William Orr, formerly Lieutenant Colonel of the Nineteenth. After the consolidation, the regiment remained in the works near Petersburg until the advance made by the army the following spring. The only respite from this duty was when the regiment was sent out, with other troops, to cut the enemy's communications. In the advance on the Weldon Railroad, it went as far as Stony Creek, and afterwards participated in the battles on the left of Petersburg, at Preble's House and Hatcher's Run. In all of the engagements on the left, from Hatcher's Run to the fall of Richmond, the Twentieth took an active part, and was in the advance division of the 2d corps, which was the directing corps of the army in the pursuit of Lee, participating in all the battles up to the surrender of the Army of Virginia—its last engagement with the enemy being at Clover Hill, on the 9th of April, 1865. Soon after, the regiment marched to Washington City, from whence it moved to Louisville, Kentucky, on the 14th of June, where it arrived on the 21st of the same month. On the 12th of July, 1865, it was mustered out at that place, with 390 men and 23 officers present for duty. Returning to Indianapolis on the same day, in command of Col. Albert S. Andrews, (originally of the Fourteenth Regiment), it was welcomed home by Gov. Morton in an address delivered at a public reception given the regiment in the State House Grove, at which speeches were also made by General Hovey, Dr. Opheus Everts and Chaplain Wm. C. Porter. A few days after the regiment was finally discharged from service.

fighting all day loss heavy the fighting is in the wilder ness about five miles from Chancellorsville the fight is still undecided and will probably will begin early in the morning Gen. A. ? killed

Friday, May 6, 1864

To day the fight still continues

~~stormed~~[?]

This has been the hardest battle of the war and is not yet over the troops are in the best of spirits and a confident of once afa [and for all?] loss bearing especially on officers
Col. Carrol wound

Saturday 7

started to Fredericksburg with the wounded
drove across the Rapidan and parked the train the fighting to day has been light no general engagement our forces

Sunday 8

This morning we get ordered to return
with the wounded
to Chancellorsvill arrived there about noon and was ordered to Frederick burg The army has moved to Spotsylvania
C.H.

Monday, May 9, 1864

arrived at Fredericksburg unloaded and started back the city looks desolate and the citizens look gloomy and disponing they fear Grant and well they may

Tuesday 10

To day the fight still continues near Spotsyl—vania C. H. this afternoon there has been a hard fight for the possession of PO River but we have pushed them back an inch at a time Gen Sedgwick was killed

Wednesday 11

There has been skirmish ing all day started again to Fredericksburg with wounded

Thursday, May 12, 1864

the battle opened early this morning and was carried on till late in the day resulting in th 2nd and 9th corps driving the Rebels capturing ten thousand prisoners and 40 pieces of artillery. I arrd at Fredericksburg and kept on to Belleplain

Friday 13

Left Belle Plain from the Forent [front] passed the prisoners that were captured yesterday parked about one mile from the landing

Saturday 14

started on our journey early this morning arrived within two mil[e]s The army is still

Today there has been some fighting all along the line

Saturday 4

considerable fighting to day mostly by artillery

Sunday, June 5, 1864

[The?] passed very quiet till just about dark when the Rebels opened in front of our division there was a sharp firing for som half hour our loss was very light

Monday 6

Everything is quiet to day
The 14th Ind was relieved to night and started for home but fewer men wer left to return out of 1,000 that came out three years ago the veterans and recruits are to be consolidated with the 20th IND

Tuesday 7

There was a flag of truce this evening for the purpose of removing the dead and wounded from between the lines the 14th was consolidated with the 20th Ind

Wednesday, June 8, 1864

It seems as though both armies are inclined to rest for there is nothing doing on either side

Thursday 9

Every thing is still quiet but this quiet cant last much longer I dont think

Friday 10

The fight continued near all night last night and till late in the forenoon but with what success I have not learned about sundown I went to the front there was considerable fighting going on along the line our men driving the rebels from there works weather warm thro the day and cool night

Saturday 18

There is nothing of interest taking place on our front what is doing in other places we can not tell

Sunday 19

To day we began to move the wounded to City point we think that it indicates a move if so it will be developed in a day or two

Monday, June 20, 1864

Every thing is still quiet only picket firing and artillery firing is all that is doing now

Tuesday 21

The 2nd Corps was relieved last night and passed to the rear the boys thought they would get a good rest but this morning the order came to pack up and be off we marched
